

FREED DRUG ADDICT HELD BY MONAGHAN

Judge Refuses "Expose" Offer of Man Who Was Released by Renshaw

ASKS CHANCE FOR CURE

Judge Monaghan, sitting as a committing magistrate, today held Albert Fitzgerald in $5000 bail for the Grand Jury on charges of possessing and selling narcotic drugs.

The prisoner was held despite his plea that the Judge let him go to a hospital to be cured of the habit. He promised that if this were done he would "help get the men who were selling the drugs to me."

"It is just as easy to talk now, Fitzgerald, if you have anything to tell," said Assistant District Attorney Gordon.

Fitzgerald, who bears the plain stamp of the habitual drug user on his face and in his trembling body, was arrested last night on a bench warrant issued by Judge Monaghan after another prisoner, William Fries, on trial for having a drug unlawfully in his possession, had related that he got it from Fitzgerald.

Yesterday Fries testified he had bought drugs "fifty times" in a Ninth street restaurant where Fitzgerald worked as a waiter.

Today, on the witness stand, Fries declared that the purchases had not been made from waiters but from drug peddlers who went to the restaurant for meals.

"I was down and out," said Fries, "and had no money. I needed the drug and asked Fitzgerald if he had some he could spare me. I knew he used it himself."

"I mean to get at the bottom of this drug business," said Judge Monaghan, "I intend to learn who are the men who run it and why they do it."

During the hearing the wife of William Fitzgerald appeared and looked at the prisoner over.

"I heard it," said the woman, "This is Albert Fitzgerald, his brother."

TWO HURT IN AUTO CRASH AT MERION

Walter Schank, of Darby, Believed Fatally Injured as Head Strikes Stone

Two men were hurt, one perhaps fatally, in an automobile collision at 8.45 o'clock this morning at Merion and Swanton avenues, Merion.

The injured are Walter Schank, 1414 South Seventh street, Darby, and Henry Hausman, of 106 North Fifth street, Darby. Both are in the Bryn Mawr Hospital, Hausman with severe cuts and bruises, Schank with a gashed head, a left hand almost severed and internal injuries which may prove fatal.

The two men who were hurt were riding in the car of P. M. Yates, of 1424 Cortes street, who was driving a medium-sized motor car.

West on Swanton avenue came a large sedan, the property of Nicholas Thuron, of Montgomery and Merion avenues, who was driving a Buick. The sedan struck the car of Yates, which was driving north on Merion avenue.

Neither driver saw the other until the last moment. The two machines crashed, skidded together, and almost side by side, careened up on the lawn of Harold A. Busby, at the corner. His shrubbery was uprooted, and his lawn plowed in two furrows by the cars, which came to rest side by side. Both were wrecked almost beyond repair.

Mr. Thuron's car was empty save for the chauffeur. The drivers of both cars escaped injury, almost by a miracle. The two passengers in Mr. Yates' car were flung out violently. The victim whose serious hurt struck his head against the stone and lay stunned where he fell.

Patrolman Miller heard the crash and telephoned for the police car. The two men were rushed to the hospital.

CITY OFFICIALS INSPECT NORTHEAST IMPROVEMENTS

Mayor and Department Heads View New School Site

Mayor Moore, members of his cabinet and city councilmen visited public improvements in the Northeast this afternoon. With the Mayor were Directors Caven, Twining and Warburton; Councilmen Weigand and Patton; and William Brown, president of the Board of Education.

One of the principal objects of the trip was to inspect the site at Grand Ramona streets, in the Third-Second Ward, which the Mayor said would be started soon.

A district school was created as the Director Warburton was created as the cars sped up Broad street by the wind, which blew off the hat of the Director of Welfare, and deposited it in the path of another car. It was a total loss, but in lieu of something better the director dusted it off and wore it.

The party visited Junata Park, where Councilman Patton was wading pool; then went to the big city acreage at Torresdale avenue and Wakening street. Part of this is now Whitehall Common. The School Board wants a place for a junior high school, and Council has passed an ordinance granting it. The ordinance is now before the Mayor. The party had luncheon at Evergreen Farms.

ASSASSINS STAB MOTORCAR DRIVER

Brother and Two Companions of Victim Disappear After Mysterious Attack

POLICE WITHOUT MOTIVE

John Bernakas, twenty years old, 140 Morris street, was stabbed in the neck at midnight, when he was on his way to the running board of his motorcar at South and Water streets. The assailants escaped. Their victims are believed to be living.

Police were unable to uncover a motive for the attack other than that Bernakas, an employe of the Franklin Reining Company, was involved at one time in some strike trouble at that company's plant. The stabbing, police believe, was caused by a grudge long held by a man whose name Bernakas is said to have taken at the plant.

Bernakas is unconscious in Mount Sinai Hospital, and so far has been unable to give an account of the attack.

Detectives of the Third and De Lancy streets station a short time after the attack and are looking for two others.

The three men gave their names and addresses as James Redmond, Front and Bainbridge streets; Joseph Gaskill, street near Second, and James Gaskill, street near Second.

When Trenton Knew This 'Prince,' He Was a 'King'

Louis Henri de Bourbon, Le Monarque des Pots! His Latest Title—and Befitting

Fugitive "Prince" Was Best Known in Trenton Hotel as Potato Peeler

Prince Louis Henri de Bourbon? Le Duc de Verotte? Nous le reconnaissons? Assurément—le Monarque des Pots.

Next time you go to Trenton, my dear children, remind some one to show you the rear door of the Hotel Sterling, for there is a strange and interesting story connected with this door.

One morning a young man, who had never been seen in that city before, knocked at the door of the Hotel Sterling, for there is a strange and interesting story connected with this door.

He had fallen on evil times. "Trouble" was the right word, children. The young man had fallen upon evil times and was being forced to work, although it was being said that he was being fitted for higher things.

"I received," began the young man, "of these careful accounts which were an aristocratic breed for 200 generations, as he drew a newspaper from his pants pocket and unfolded it, "that you have advertised for an assistant."

"I advertised for a pan scrubber," replied the dumfounded Scherer, "if that is what you mean. What about it?"

"Well, that was just it. The young man was actually offering himself as a pan scrubber. At first he refused to believe him, and then, after he was convinced, he refused to give the job to a man with such soft white hair."

"So the young man became a pan scrubber, and though he was a little awkward at first, he became in time the best pan scrubber that ever had worked in that hotel. Such care did he take to remove the very finest streak of grease or the smallest atom of soap powder, that his work was noticed by the manager, the manager, himself."

"Ab, He Was Such a Pot Scrubber!" In all my days," said Tamson to Scherer, "I have not seen such another pot scrubber."

"Yes, that is so," agreed Scherer. "At first he was a little weak on the underneath parts, but that he managed by earnest striving to overcome."

"By the way, had," said Scherer one day, "what's your last name?"

"Van Buren," the young man replied. "Do you know Van Buren?"

"Yes, until recently I had a practice in Washington."

"Related to the President? Oh, Yes. Now wasn't this the an aristocrat? Go away and all that. In all this time, as I am proud, even to be called a pot scrubber, was one of the pan scrubbers in Trenton and perhaps in all New Jersey. He had a kind word for each of the girls."

"By the way, had," said Scherer one day, "what's your last name?"

"Van Buren," the young man replied. "Do you know Van Buren?"

"Yes, until recently I had a practice in Washington."

as Trenton knew him before he began to pass himself as Prince Louis Henri de Bourbon. At Trenton, as a pan scrubber, he was content to remain himself merely as a great-grandson of a United States President.

A protest began to burn, or something, "No, no!"

They all noticed that Martin spent most of his spare time in a nearby bar. Every day his boots were out, his hair was combed, his hands engaged and needed. Just like an aristocrat! Always careful to have a pleasing appearance! And because he had such much money, he was able to exchange sandwiches for cigars with the bar man and give the cigars to his favorite barbers.

"How much do you pay that famous pan scrubber, the one who is called Tamson?"

"Fifteen a week," replied Tamson.

"Only his bill runs to about $12 a week," said the barber.

"Now, with all the fine work Martin had done you might have thought they would have paid him more, or at least to discontinue it. But the idea never seems to have occurred to them. Or if it did, they said to themselves: 'Just because this man is a good pot scrubber is no reason why he should be a good dishwasher, which, after all, is more delicate work.'

"So one day, after about four months, Martin decided to get out of Trenton, and he was in Trenton, gave up his job. That was about two years ago."

"But not long ago Scherer was reading his paper and noticed a picture of Prince Henri de Bourbon, Duc de Verotte, Comte de Paris, Duc d'Anjou, Comte de Champagne, Comte de Valois and Prince d'Anjou—all the titles of one man."

"And whose picture do you suppose it was?"

"Martin's!"

Below was an account which told how he had received the Car, had escaped from his exile, had cleared thousands of miles of forest of potatoes, had defied the police of New York, had made love to all the great beauties of the world, and had done many other famous things. And now if he had his rights he would be King of France today!

"Proving children that blood will always run, though we do not always know exactly what."

"The police say the prince is Harold Scherer, a New Britain, Conn. factory hand, wanted in Boston as a bigamy suspect."

"I am his great-great-grandson!"

Wins Fight in Gale

Capt. Henry C. Mustin

Who fought his way through a cloud bank 1000 feet deep against a heavy wind and with the engine of his airplane "missing"

Philadelphia Naval Officer Had Thrilling Experience 2000 Feet Above Earth

MUSTIN BATTLED FOR LIFE IN SKY

Philadelphia Naval Officer Had Thrilling Experience 2000 Feet Above Earth

How a naval aviator battled for his life in low-flying clouds on a flight from Philadelphia to Washington was narrated today in a report to the Senate by Captain H. C. Mustin, U. S. N., assistant chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, the hero of the experience. He is a Philadelphia native living in Washington.

Mustin told of fighting his way through a cloud bank 1000 feet deep, bucking a stiff gale at the same time, when the motor of his airplane "went bad." That he escaped disaster was attributed to a gyroscopic indicator with which all naval planes are now equipped, and to the fact that the motor "picked up" just in time to enable him to avoid a forced landing on unknown terrain.

Mustin, who is one of the oldest and most experienced pilots in the navy, was making a return flight to Washington from Philadelphia on Tuesday in a night training flight, when the engine of his airplane "went bad." The report followed when the Delaware River to Wilmington and then overland to the Chesapeake.

On reaching Annapolis the plane was headed direct for Washington overland. It was then that difficulties were encountered.

Heavy winds were blowing at the high altitude chosen, and soon dense cloud banks came between the airplane and the ground. At this time the engine began to develop a vibration, and from indications led the pilot to believe water had got into the fuel. It was necessary to descend through the thick banks of clouds, until the engine began to vibrate with alarm by every pilot.

In this emergency a test was afforded of an instrument which has recently been made, and is being used on all types of naval planes. The gyroscopic turn indicator, the instrument in question, is designed to keep the pilot informed of the position of the plane when flying in dense fog or cloud banks. By means of it he can keep a true course and come safely through.

Without it he may fly in circles or even upside down without appreciating his peril until too late.

The high wind, with heavy cloud banks and "chumpy" air combined to give Captain Mustin a practical demonstration of the utility of the instrument by means of it he was enabled to maneuver his plane through the clouds without deviating from the course. This was leading him in the direction of the Potomac River, which he hoped to find before being forced down by complete engine failure. Almost at the last moment necessity for making a forced landing was obviated when the engine again picked up speed close to the ground. The trip went forward without further incident.

Captain Mustin inserted Miss Corinne P. Montague, a high graduate of Annapolis Naval Academy.

E. A. GIMBEL GIVES $25,000 FOR FAIR

Pledges D'Olier Aid of Store Organizations Here, in N. Y. and Milwaukee

'HEART AND SOUL' FOR PLAN

Ellis A. Gimbel pledged $25,000 to the Sesqui-Centennial today.

Mr. Gimbel's pledge was made to Colonel Franklin D'Olier, president of the Sesqui-Centennial Association, who called to see Mr. Gimbel at his office. The Philadelphia store owner also pledged the support of his entire organization, not only in this city, but in New York and Milwaukee as well.

Following his conference with Mr. Gimbel, Colonel D'Olier said: "Mr. Gimbel assured me of the hearty support of not only himself, but his brothers and a very organization to the utmost of their ability. He assured me that they were back of this proposition to make it a most fitting celebration that would do credit to the city, the State and the Nation."

"As an evidence of his practical support he stated that as a starter we might count on $25,000 from his firm, which shows in a very definite way how favorably the real support that may be expected from this wonderful organization. He further stated that his entire organization of more than 4000 in Philadelphia, exclusive of the New York and Milwaukee firms, were back of this project heart and soul and would like to contribute liberally toward its success."

Mr. Gimbel was in the city only two hours today, and gave one-half of that time to Colonel D'Olier. He dropped into his office on a flying visit and left early this afternoon for New England to resume his vacation.

He is the second big store owner of the city to pledge a large amount to the Sesqui-Centennial. John Wanamaker pledged $25,000 for himself and an additional $25,000 for his son, Rodman.

Tonight Colonel D'Olier will leave this city for Washington, where tomorrow he will confer with Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce; Senator Pepper and Solicitor General James M. Beck. As all three are vitally interested in the success of the fair, the colonel believes it a good idea to learn their views as well as those of the many prominent Philadelphians who have interested themselves in the project to remain in Washington tomorrow only and will then return to this city.

After his conference with Mr. Gimbel, Colonel D'Olier dropped into the Reading Terminal for a talk with Agnew T. Dice, president of the Philadelphia and Reading. Mr. Dice is not yet convinced that there is a bona fide demand for a Sesqui-Centennial exhibition," said the colonel.

This morning was an exceedingly busy one for the new Sesqui-Centennial president, as he attended a meeting of the Board of Directors of the First National Bank. He has been a member of the board for ten years. At 1 o'clock the colonel launched with John F. Lewis, and then went to a committee meeting of the First National Bank.

Gifford Pinchot, Republican nominee for Governor, just Colonel D'Olier last night and pledged the support of his administration, if he is elected, to the exposition.

The meeting took place at a dinner in the home of Major Warburton, Director of Public Welfare, in Jenkintown.

Among those present were John Wanamaker, Mr. Warburton, vice chairman of the Board of Directors of the First National Bank, and Mrs. J. O'Brien, director of publicity for the Women's Republican Committee.

An greatly interested and anxious to consult with you whenever the plans for an adequate celebration have been formulated," said Mr. Pinchot to Colonel D'Olier. "The idea of such a celebration attracts me greatly."
